If she says yes, then congratulations. We dated for five months after that. The guys I have gone out with have typically waited at least a dozen messages to ask. I don't think they are really comparable. Thought I'd throw the question out to the ladies around here though - does it really matter how soon we ask you out online. So not really a too soon. So I don't have much to lose. I'd rather just meet you. There's no advice or rule that can blanket everyone. You can spend your time and energy on girls who want to meet you. I'm insanely picky, and I'm only interested in meeting guys I've established an intellectual rapport with beforehand and I know I'm not the norm on this sub a those preferences. Online dating is so tricky because people hide behind their computers and it's hard to read them. I feel like such an old geezer for asking. Story time: every time a man avoids asking me out longer than a day or two of messaging, he always gets sexual, asking online dating how long before asking out pics, trying to transition to dirty talk, etc. This weekend, I met a girl via Match. If you are at an office or shared network, you can ask the network administrator to run a scan across the network looking for misconfigured or infected devices. It was a great first date because our meeting was so casual. And my schedule this week has been hectic so far with stuff I had planned before I even messaged her. Thing is in my area is a lot of women in their profile mention their frustration that guys want to message for a long time without asking them out. It's hard to get to know people via text. In fact, as a relatively low-maintenance girl who isn't attracted to insecurity or indecision, I find something pretty compelling about a guy with whom I obviously share a lot in common, who sends a message emphasizing those commonalities and then closes with, "My name is Blur out the faces of anyone who isn't you. I like down time to decide if you're worth making room in my week for. As well, I don't see a huge change in my response rates when compared to my old strategy- my theory is it if a woman's open to meeting you, she will meet you whether you ask sooner or later, and vice versa. I haven't been wrong so far. It doesn't really work that way. Like online you going to take my kidneys? So guys are going to ask sooner than later if they are smart.
